Pulse diagnosis traditionally has been revered as Chinese Medicine's cardinal diagnostic practice by many Chinese medical scholars. However, because of the difficulty in mastering pulse taking, pulse diagnosis has unfortunately been reduced to confirming a diagnosis arrived by other diagnostic techniques, rather than being a reliable diagnostic tool in itself.

In this Pulsynergy Made Easy series, you will learn how to effectively utilize pulse taking to its full diagnostic potential from Jimmy Wei-Yen Chang, one of the very few (if not the only one) who knows and is willing to teach you the invaluable knowledge of how to integrate TCM pulse taking into diagnosing western biomedical conditions. Furthermore, Master Chang shares with you his thinking behind how he prescribes herbal formulations based on both TCM and western perspectives.

In Pulsynergy Made Easy Part I, Master Chang explains the fundamentals of pulse taking, including the precise cun, guan, chi locations, finger positions, and organ correlations. In addition, Master Chang covers the Wu Zang Mai (Five Organ Pulses), the body's original 'normal' pulses, which represents the exemplary physiological functioning of the body's organs; the Liu Qi Mai (Six Qi Pulses), the pulses which identify distortions to the body's homeostasis due to exogenous factors, such as dryness, cold, dampness; and the Liu Bing Mai (Six Pathological Pulses), pathological pulses in accordance to a yin and yang framework.

In Pulsynergy Made Easy Part II, Master Chang reveals his Pulsynergy 'Special Pulses', which reflects today's most commonly seen conditions, such as angina pectoris, gallstones, high cholesterol, and more. He breaks down these pulses into their basic components - shape, jump, or level - and explains their significance and general indications. Beyond that, Master Chang teaches the pulses of the Eight Extra meridians and their significance. The information divulged in this class cannot be found in any classic or contemporary books.

In Pulsynergy Made Easy Part III, Master Chang teaches pulses according to the pulse positions. He explains in great length the most commonly seen pulses in each of the cun, guan, and chi position on both hands and their indications in terms of modern biomedical conditions. In addition, Master Chang correlates herbal formulas to the different conditions revealed by the pulses found on each of the pulse positions.

In Pulsynergy Made Easy Part IV, Master Chang discusses his newest discoveries of uncommonly seen pulses. He begins by presenting a description and the general indications of each of these less commonly felt pulses. Master Chang then delves into the specifics by integrating each of these pulses with biomedical conditions depending on the location (cun, guan, chi) of the pulse. Lastly, Master Chang correlates the treatment principles and herbal formulas to the findings of each of these pulses on the cun, guan, chi.
